The Big League Stretch.

Now for the stretch where, neck and neck,

The leaders flash before the throng;

In battle of the swift and strong;

Where broken entries lag behind

In faltering step before the pace

That flashes like the onward wind

The last few furlongs of the race;

Hark to the bugle-roll of drum-

And red blood runs in veins of fire;

In headlong battle for the wire; Where crimson clot may dull the eyes

But flung against the August skies

Hark to the bugle-roll of drum-

There rings the warring battle note;

Where stalwart souls know no defeat

And breath may clog the pulsing throat,
